Pros:

- Incredibly dynamic runner who is great creating after the catch
- Versatile player
- Lined up everywhere except tight end
- Burner who stresses defense vertically
- Natural hands
- Great vertical leap
- Can stop on a dime
- Transition speed is impressive
- Very good balance
- Agility and acceleration are top notch

Cons:

- Will struggle to beat press initially
- Still learning the position
- Doesn't make use of suddenness in routes
- Not a great route runner yet
- Takes plays off that he's not involved in

Braxton Miller has had an interesting journey in college. He started out as a freshman quarterback who was the Big 10 player of the year, considered a Heisman candidate, then moved to receiver to make an NFL roster this past season. Miller made the right decision. On tape he looks like Percy Harvin without the hip issues. He's incredibly dynamic as a runner and as a receiver. He's still very raw in his route running and he needs to refine his overall game. He also takes plays off that he's not involved in. Because of that he looks slow coming off the line of scrimmage despite being electrifyingly fast and explosive. Is a first round talent that some teams might shy away from because of his raw skill set. The arrow points up for Miller who will be an impact starter at the next level.
