

Leonard Floyd

Height: 6'6" Weight: 244 Arms: 33"

OLB Georgia Jr.

Combine: 40 yd Dash: 4.60 20 Yd Shuttle : 4.32 Vert: 39.5"

Pros:

- Long arms and legs
- Huge frame
- Does a great job locking out blocker
- Doesn't get stuck on blocks
- Very elusive and slips blocks easily
- Great motor, flies all over the field
- Asked to drop in zone, play man
- Played all over the field
- Good burst off the ball
- shows ability to bend the corner
- Decent set of pass rush moves
- Chase player who can run play down from behind
- Looks fluid enough to drop into
- Keeps low pad level when engaging

Cons:

- Looks very thin
- Played lighter than listed weight
- Not a sure tackler
- Lacks adequate power
- Doesn't bring any pop to tackles
- No power behind punch
- Hot headed
- Struggles in coverage when asked to drop

At best Leonard Floyd is Jamie Collins. He could turn into a freakish athlete that can drop in to coverage, play the run and pass, and get pressure on the quarterback. At worst he's Aaron Maybin or Barkevious Mingo; a player that is simply not big enough and strong enough to play in the NFL. He's got speed and explosion but lacks any sort of power to his game. At times it's easy to confuse Floyd with a receiver, due to his thin, lanky frame. He's strong for his size, but at 6'6" you'd hope for him to be at least 260. At 244, he'll have to strictly be an outside linebacker in a hybrid defense. Floyd is talented, and has solid pass rushing potential, but it doesn't seem like he'll be able to add the adequate muscle mass to hold up at the next level. He's going to be over-drafted, but he may never develop into anything more than a situational pass rusher.