

Myles Jack

Height: 6'1" Weight: 245 Arms: 34"

LB UCLA Sr.

Combine: 40 yd Dash: DNP 20 YD Shuttle: DNP Vert: DNP"

Pros:

- Hyper athletic, hyper aggressive linebacker
- Plays with hair on fire
- Loose hips, can turn and run
- Great acceleration and closing speed
- Plays with a mean streak
- Hits hard and hits first
- Chases plays down from behind
- Sideline-to-sideline player
- Can still make play when out of position
- Strong player
- Lined up at multiple positions
- Good in man coverage

Cons:

- Overly aggressive, bits on fakes
- Sometimes struggles to disengage from blocks
- Still a bit raw in technique
- Take some false steps initially

Myles Jack is the type of linebacker that defensive coordinators salivate over. He's got all the physical tools you look for in a three down linebacker. He's fast enough to play outside, and he's strong and big enough to play inside. If Jack has one word that describes him it would be 'active'. He's all over the field and flies to the ball to make the play. At times his aggression becomes over-aggression and he can be caught out of position. He takes too many false steps towards the line of scrimmage as the play unfolds and doesn't hold his ground to diagnose the play before reacting. That being said, you would rather have an aggressive linebacker who seeks out the ball than a passive one. Once Jack refines his game and takes out the mental mistakes from his game, he's a top 10 linebacker in the NFL. He's fast, strong physical and plays with great intensity. The desire to be great is there, even on tape. He will be an impact player at the next level.

*Injured his meniscus this past season but seems to have fully recovered. Shouldn't hurt draft stock.