<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Good sized, well-proportioned LB - Shows ability to read then react - Athletic with good speed, good in coverage - Aggressive to the ball when diagnosed - Jarring hitter who can make an impact - Willing to lay the wood and take a beating 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Average height, not big as you'd like - Speed to sideline is slightly above average - No physical traits are elite - Will gamble and lose at times - Struggles to fight off trash gets sucked inside - Bites on play fakes and will be over-aggressive

Summary: You know you have a quality prospect when the worst you can say is that he 'tries too hard'. Jarrad Davis ended his career at Florida after two seasons as a starter as an All-SEC Second Team linebacker. Davis started nine games due to injury but amassed 60 tackles, six for loss, and two sacks. Davis is a fast-flowing MIKE linebacker who does a great job diagnosing and attacking. He's well built with good strength and speed. While a bit undersized at 6'1", Davis uses his long arms to bench press linemen, shed and make plays. He's good in coverage and shows the ability to be a three down linebacker. Davis arrives with authority and is a good tackler. However, at times he gets more wrapped up in hitting blockers than shedding and making the play. He also can be overly aggressive and over-run plays. Davis will also guess and shoot the gap to make a play and get himself out of position. His attacking style will always leave him open to play-action fakes and cutback runs, but Davis does show that he can be patient and read before reacting. Fixing his warts shouldn't be too hard and you'd rather have a player that's too aggressive than not aggressive enough. His injury history may require some exploration, but he's a very good linebacker prospect who will make an impact at the next level. He lacks the top end traits to be a first round pick but he won't last long in the 2nd round.
