

GARETT BOLLES

UTAH

Height: 6'5" Weight: 297 Arms: 34"

Combine:

40 yd Dash: 4.95 3 Cone: 7.29 20 yd Shuttle: 4.55 Vert: 28"

Pros:	Cons:
<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Quick player with pop - Great athlete with good hips - Feisty hitter who initiates contact - Great use of hands - Moves people and opens holes - Can execute multiple blocking styles - Moves well in space 	<ul style="list-style-type: none"> - Gets a bit too aggressive, loses balance - A bit light, needs more lower body bulk - Needs to sustain blocker a second longer - Not powerful, lacks top end strength - Lacks core strength and NFL muscle

Summary: Garrett Bolles is another JUCO transfer who started one year at the Division I level before declaring for the NFL Draft. Bolles spent two years at Snow College where he was a top rated JUCO Transfer. After signing with the Utes, Bolles was a day one starter at left tackle and earned a spot on the All-Pac 12 first team. Bolles turned around his life during his teen years after being kicked out of his house and landing in jail. Bolles was taken in by a Utah family and transformed himself. On the field, he plays with a fiery aggression and intensity. He's physically gifted with great athleticism, loose hips, and quick feet. Bolles displays great technique in multiple blocking techniques as well. He can reach block, down block, combo and pull effectively. He does a great job in pass protection as well, making good use of his hands and mirroring pass rushers well. One area that the Lehi native lacks in is top end power. He doesn't have much of an athletic bubble or a thick lower body. Bolles makes up for that with leverage and grit. He also can be a bit over-aggressive at times and lean too far forward, leaving himself unbalanced. Bolles is a talented individual who would probably fit best in a zone blocking scheme. His athleticism and tenacity will land him in the late first to early 2nd round. His lack of power holds him back from being a high draft pick.